Meet Your NRA Competitive Shooting Division

By NRA Staff, Photos by Lloyd Hill

There are 26 people in the NRA Competitive Shooting Division and each contributes to the Division's overall task of sanctioning up to 10,000 local matches, maintaining nearly 120,000 shooter classifications and conducting 47 National Championships each year. We hope you enjoy "meeting them" through this mini-series.

Disabled Shooting Services Department

Members: Vanessa Ross, Manager

What We Do: Since its inception in 1994, NRA's Disabled Shooting Services Department has offered programs that have enabled thousands of Americans with physical disabilities to enjoy a variety of shooting activities. These programs introduce hunting, recreational and competitive shooting to adults and children with physical disabilities. Whether a person is interested in getting started or looking to compete in the Paralympics, Disabled Shooting Services has the avenue to assist them. We have worked with Paralyzed Veterans of America, North Carolina Handicapped Sportsmen, USA Shooting, Turning Point Nation and STRIDE Adaptive Sports to bring a variety of shooting programs to their members. We now offer more than 20 matches a year created specifically for shooters with disabilities and teach basic shooting skills to new shooters across the country. Additionally, we offer Disability Awareness Training for people who want to work with people with disabilities but are not sure how.

Contact Information: For information on Disabled Shooting Services contact us at (703) 267-1495, by e-mail to disabled-shooting@nrahq.org or visit www.nrahq.org/compete/disabled.asp.

Collegiate and Schools Department

Members: Jody West, Program Coordinator (l.) and Tori Croft, National Manager

What We Do: The Collegiate and Schools Department manages all NRA Collegiate & School Shooting Programs to include Collegiate Rifle & Pistol Sectionals, NRA Collegiate Pistol Championships, NRA Intercollegiate Rifle Club Championships and Junior and Senior ROTC matches. We also co-sponsor ACUI Shotgun and NCAA Rifle Championships. We maintain the NRA Collegiate Shooting Sports Directory, a database of universities and colleges with shooting programs, their points of contact, scholarship opportunities, range availability and level of competition. If you don't see your school listed, check with our office as this list changes often. We also list prior-year results on our website for Intercollegiate Sectionals, NRA Championships and NRA All-Americans. Among the many resources on our website is the book 60 Years of NRA All-Americans. This premier commemorative book chronicles the first 60 years of the NRA All-American Program (1936-1998). The 10-year All American addendum, 1999-2009, will be available shortly.

Contact Information: For information on Collegiate Programs contact us at (703) 267-1473/1484, by e-mail to collegiate@nrahq.org or visit www.nrahq.org/compete/coldir.asp. For the Collegiate Sports Directory, go to: www.nrahq.org/compete/college_lookup.asp.

STEEL CHICKENS

Catering to all Silhouette disciplines, Mile Coleman (Tacoma, WA) started Steel Chickens in 2004 for shooters who need information on how to enter and compete with entry-level equipment and to learn basic techniques. As the user forums were added, things blossomed to where new shooters met experienced competitors in a way that others could "listen in" on the conversation, albeit online. Knowledge is shared, questions answered and, best of all, a community of 1,000 active members look forward to meeting and competing together. The website averages about 4,000 individual hits per day from members worldwide including Australia, Ireland, Scandinavia and South Africa. Give them a look at www.steelchickens.com.

NRA and Pyramyd Air Team Up To Support Disabled Shooters

NRA partnered with Pyramyd Air to give disabled shooters and adaptive sports groups a sweet deal. Pyramid's Air Arms MPR air rifle is offered at a discounted price of $750. "One of the greatest obstacles holding back the advancement of disabled shooters is the affordability of precision grade air rifles," said NRA Disabled Shooting Manager Vanessa Ross. "Pyramyd Air's willingness to offer the Air Arms MPR at the discounted price means that participation by competitive shooters and adaptive sports groups should increase to record numbers." To purchase an Air Arms rifle at the discounted price, contact Ross at disabled_shooting@nrahq.org or (703) 267-1495. For more about NRA's disabled shooting program, visit www.nrahq.org/compete/disabled.asp.

Juniors Take National Titles

A team of three junior shooters from Santa Ynez Gun Club in California took home the gold and the title of 2010 National Scholastic Trap Program Open Champions at this year's USA Shooting Junior Olympic Championships. More than 100 juniors from around the country participated in the event, held Jul. 17-18 in Colorado Springs, CO. The Santa Ynez team of Ashley Carroll, Michael J. Flores and Logan Mountain finished well ahead of the silver medalists from Missouri and bronze medalists from Connecticut, closing the match with 309 targets. Carroll and Flores, both National Junior Olympic Team members, took bronze in 2009 and silver in 2008. According to Carroll, "I guess it's true when they say the third time is a charm."

3-Gun Nation Tour Rolls On

Robert Romero walked away with the win and a $5,000 check in the FNH USA 3-Gun Nation Shoot-Off at the recent 2010 Midwest 3-Gun Championsips in Fayette, MO. More than 200 shooters took part in the event, one of five (Blue Ridge Mountain 3-Gun, Superstition Mountain, FNH USA Midwest 3-Gun, MGM IronMan and Rocky Mountain) that determine the final roster of shooters in the exciting culmination of the FNH USA 3-Gun Nation tour presented by SureFire. The championship will be held Sep. 13 at the USPSA Nationals in Boulder City, NV. The winner will walk away with a $25,000 grand prize provided by Leupold. For more information on the FNH USA 3-Gun Nation Shoot-Off, visit www.3gunnation.com.

First American Celebrity Classic Shoot Planned

Preparations are in the works now for a new event to be held at the National Shooting Complex in San Antonio, TX, honoring the men and women that serve in our armed forces. On Jun. 3-4, 2011, The American Celebrity Classic will bring together sportsmen, outdoor-related industries, outfitters, professional athletes and celebrities that promote shooting sports for an exciting and one-of-a-kind, nationally televised shooting event with the ultimate goal to help our military personnel, active duty and veterans.

The fun-filled weekend will include groups of professional athletes, celebrities and military personnel for two days of shooting and socializing. Proceeds will be shared by organizations such as Salute to American Heroes, Operation Welcome Home, Stars & Stripes, the Blinded Veterans Association and the USO. If you and your company are interested in being part of this worthy event, contact Cathy Williams at CMG Marketing and Events at (703) 587-7142.

This month's range bag includes tools to help plan the trajectory of a long-range bullet to the target, whether from 200 or 1,000 yards.

WIND GAUGES

Kestrel Model 3500 Wind Meter

A favorite among long distance shooters, the Model 3500 measurements include temperature, altitude, pressure trends and wind speed. The meter is waterproof and is designed for stability and accuracy with convenient benefits such as a large, easy-to-read display, data hold function, real-time clock and replaceable coin cell battery with an average life of 300 hours. This Kestrel model also features a patented, user-replaceable and shock-mounted impeller and a thermally adjusted humidity sensor that can be recalibrated in the field (humidity calibration kit available separately). It also includes a red backlight and comes with a slip-on protective cover, neck lanyard and Kestrel's five-year warranty. MSRP: $199. Contact Kestrel; (800) 891-8493; www.kestrelmeters.com.

Davis Turbo Meter

With carrying convenience right in your pocket, the turbo meter is based on the principle that a freely turning turbine's rotations will be directly proportional to the wind speed. The turbine is balanced on sapphire jewel bearings with rotations sensed by an infrared light beam, with a resulting signal processed electronically. The meter's display provides extra resolution and superb contrast in bright sunlight. Select between four scales—knots, feet per minute, meters per second and miles per hour. Can measure wind speed up to 99.9 mph. MSRP: $165. Contact Davis; (800) 678-3669; www.davisnet.com.

Skywatch Xplorer 3

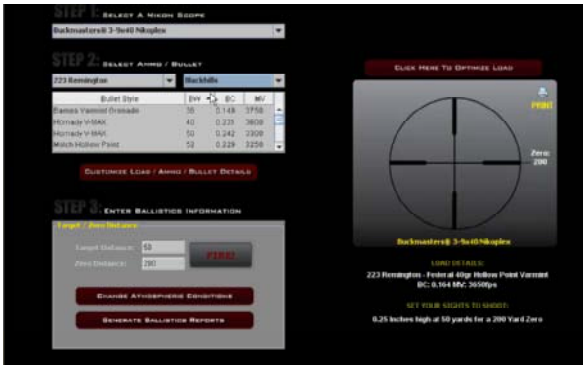

Created for both consumer and professional use, the Xplorer 3 does away with seldom-used features and makes it easy to access instant readings with the press of a button. Water and shock resistant, the meter's digital compass measures degrees off North, useful for recording wind direction. Displays both Fahrenheit and Celsius temperature readings and accurate wind speed is measured in knots, mph, kmh, ft/m and m/s. The Skywatch also features a backlight, stainless steel back, replaceable battery and weighs just 2 ounces. MSRP: $128. Contact: Ambientweather.com; (877) 413-8800; www.ambientweather.com.

Caldwell Wind Wizard

The ability to judge shot placement and make adjustments in any wind condition doesn't have to be challenging. With the Caldwell Wind Wizard you'll have the ultimate tool at your fingertips for indicating wind speed and temperature in a range of measurement units. An affordable tool to help shooters determine bullet drift, the Wizard is compact and portable, features an easy-to-read LCD backlight, includes temperature readings in Celsius and Fahrenheit, wind chill display and auto power off to conserve batteries. MSRP: $39. Contact Battenfeld Technologies; (573) 445-9200; www.battenfeldtechnologies.com.

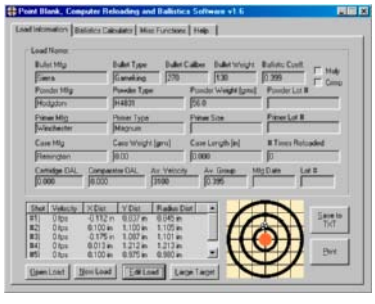

BALLISTIC SOFTWARE

Nikon's Spot On

This is a free online application that allows users to search and select from a large database of ammo and reloading components to suit their exact shooting needs. Match your rifle and scope to your preferred load and the application will create a variety of printable charts and tables for use at your next shooting event. Options include sight-in information from close range, bullet ballistic reports, load reports with trajectory, field references and ballistic graphs, and adjustable atmospheric conditions among a host of other calculations to match specific goals. Take advantage of Nikon's easy to follow video tutorial. Free. Visit www.nikonhunting.com/spoton.

Point Blank Ballistics and Reloading

HuntingNut.com has made available free Windows PC software for download to help you get better at your long range game. Point Blank Ballistics and Reloading software is an easy to use graphical program that will help you calculate windage, compare ballistics and different bullets. Point Blank will calculate muzzle energy and recoil force and the effect on windage and drop with a change in bullet BC value. A built-in database will also track reload data and 'virtual' target performance. Free. Contact HuntingNut.com; www.huntingnut.com.

BallistiComp

JBM Ballistics will soon be releasing BallistiComp, a portable handheld ballistics computer that will help you make all your shots with confidence. BallistiComp's easy to use interface instantly calculates bullet drop and windage correction factors, velocity, energy and current atmospheric conditions which are displayed on an easy to read backlit LCD display. The program continually measures the atmospheric temperature and pressure providing updated correction factors. Small, watertight and impact resistant, BallistiComp runs on a single nine-volt battery and does not require any special connections or additional software making it completely programmable in the field. JBM also offers a variety of free ballistic calculators and software programs on their website. Visit JBM Ballistics; www.jbmballistics.com.

Perry Systems EXBAL

A computer scientist and active shooter with a longstanding interest in ballistics, G.L. Perry created the first generation of EXBAL 25 years ago, based on an empirical data model he developed with bullet manufacturers' trajectory data. The program has seen continuous improvements since, and for long range shooters, it's remained one of the best options available. With extreme accuracy, EXBAL will tell you where your bullet will go in relation to line of sight. It features a ballistic coefficient database for most bullet manufacturers, will calculate wind effects, altitude to 15,000 feet, atmospheric conditions, angle of incline, MOA adjustments and point blank range. Users are also given flexible choices in measurements and adjustments, the effects of sighting in at one altitude and shooting at another and can output all data to an Excel spreadsheet for custom reporting, analysis and graphics. The program does not need a lot of space to operate, easily generates printed reports and can be loaded on a laptop and used at the range or wherever your match may be. MSRP: $70. Contact Perry Systems; www.perry-systems.com.

Sierra Infinity Version 6

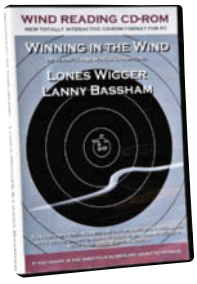

The Infinity Exterior Ballistic Computer Software Version 6 from Sierra offers a wealth of data and a variety of easy to use features. The program includes multiple trajectory charts and graphics, point blank range, calculate zero, uphill/downhill shooting, maximum range, minute of angle, profiled wind, improved atmospherics, and more. The Infinity's bullet library contains major bullet and ammunition companies as well as the capability to add new and custom bullets. The program is compatible with Windows Vista, XP or Win2K. MSRP: $60. Contact Sierra Bullets; www.sierrabullets.com.

MOBALL Ballistics Solution

The MOBALL Ballistics Solution was designed by Bryan Litz to calculate accurate sight corrections in the field, based on current conditions. The program runs on a Texas Instruments Voyage 200 graphing calculator, included in the price. Besides its function as a ballistics computer, the Voyage features advanced math functions, data and text editors, useful for storing information. MOBALL offers an extensive list of variables in addition to such standard features as multiple atmospheric, target and sight inputs. Users also have the option to account for effects of spin drift, Coriolis effect and multiple winds and calculate trajectories based on BC's referenced to G1 and G7 standards. The system weighs less than 1 pound and runs on AAA batteries. MSRP: $290. Contact Applied Ballistics LLC; www.appliedballisticsllc.com.

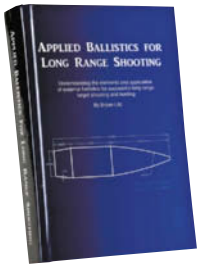

WIND RESOURCES

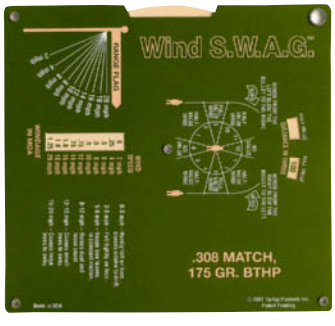

Winning in the Wind

There are few people who know the wind and how it affects the shooter like Olympic Gold Medalists and World Champions Lanny Bassham and Lones Wigger. Fortunately for the rest of us, the two masters share their collective knowledge with all shooters in Winning in the Wind CD that focuses on wind reading for competition. Bassham and Wigger offer their wind reading secrets and techniques to help you learn the effects of wind on the mind, body and bullet as well as different strategies for different wind conditions. The CD (PC compatible only) also features more than 100 digital graphics, photos and illustrations and a complete, interactive wind effects shot chart. This CD is a must for your library if you shoot anything outdoors. MSRP: $34. Contact Mental Management Systems; (972) 899-9640; www.lannybassham.com/content/winning-wind.

Applied Ballistics For Long Range Shooting

In Applied Ballistics For Long Range Shooting, Bryan Litz explains important elements of exterior ballistics in a way that all shooters can understand. One unique benefit within is the inclusion of field-measured BC data for more than 175 long range bullets of all popular brands. Shooters will be able to apply the knowledge for precise trajectory calculations. Included with Applied Ballistics is a modern ballistics program on CD which contains a distinctive way to calculate spin drift by using a method from the book. MSRP: $39. Contact Applied Ballistics LLC; www.appliedballisticsllc.com.

Wind S.W.A.G.

When you need fast and simple wind solutions, the Wind S.W.A.G. has the answers. This wind notebook and field calculator is available in 7.62 mm/ .308 caliber with 168GR on one side, 175GR on the other and formulas from 100 to 1000 yards in one easy-to-read chart. Made in the U.S. of high density plastic with a durable matte finish, S.W.A.G. has been extensively tested by military and law enforcement and is proven with novice shooters. MSRP: $29. Contact Wind S.W.A.G; (888) 847-8671; www.WindSWAG.com.

New Jersey Indoor Pistol 2700 Championship

Association of New Jersey Rifle and Pistol Clubs
Old Bridge, NJ
Mar. 19-21, 2010
Submitted by Mary Badiak
79 Competitors

The Indoor Championship was hosted this year by clubs in Old Bridge and Riverdale. With seven relays over three days, 79 competitors from four states, including a recent history record 57 New Jersey residents with nine New Jersey juniors, were able to participate.

Bruce Piatt of Montvale, NJ, finished third overall. He was also High Expert and Top Police shooter with a score of 2592-93X in only his third Bullseye competition. Piatt described his experience this way: "I learned a lot at the tournament. After tieing for first overall in the .22 and taking second place in centerfire, it became very clear that the .45 is my weak point. Between the trigger control and my ammo being loaded too fast for this game, it's been a struggle." For .22 he used a Caspian 1911 with a Bob Marvel conversion, topped with a Burris SpeedDot 135. For centerfire, he elaborates, "I took one of my old Caspian .38 super guns I've won Bianchi Cups with, took off the barricade wings and mounted a Burris SpeedDot 135 on top." For .45 he used "a standard 5" Caspian race-ready frame, Nowlin barrel and Burris Fastfire mounted to the slide. I'm shooting Sierra 185 JHPs and manage to keep them around 1" at 25 yards." After building a new .45 gun dedicated for Bullseye, he hopes to "be able to fit Bullseye into my already busy match schedule. Having never been to Camp Perry, it's like a cloud hanging over my head. Maybe 2011 will be the year."

Submitted by Kenneth Gaby

Some of the best weather folks could remember greeted 108 competitors who assembled at Camp Swift for the 2010 Texas Midrange Championship. Competitors fired 20 shots from 300, 500 and 600 yards each day for an aggregate score to determine the state champion.

Some very impressive scores were posted Sunday including a 599-39X by Andy Sykes, Aledo, TX, in the open sight category and a 600-47X by David Mann in the F Open category. Both these scores are potential records.

Other potential record scores posted were junior Trey Hayhurst, Bryson, TX, in F Target Rifle shooting 194-4X at 300 yards and 191-4X at 600 yards; and junior Karina Neira, Laredo, TX, in F-Open shooting 187-2X at 500 yards.

Special thanks to LaRue Tactical, Shilen Barrels, Lapua, White Oak Armament and Berger Bullets for supporting the match with great door prizes.

Another state light rifle match is in the books. Congratulations to Lee Widdel our new state champion. Good shooting, Lee. Widdel has had a pretty good run this winter at the light rifle matches. Good consistent shooting all year.

It was sure nice to see such a great turnout for the match. The state was well represented from the Williston-Ray area to Minot to Underwood to Bismark to Rapid City to Jamestown to Bottineau to Perth to Rolla to Sarles to Grand Fords to Cooperstown to Fargo and more. Thanks for making this the largest light rifle state match in recent history.

It's really nice to see so many young shooters taking part in this great sport. You are the future of the shooting sports so keep it up. Thanks also to all ages. We had an age spread from 14 to 83. Now what other sport can boast that kind of age spread. It's truly a sport for all ages. We had quite a few new shooters as well. That is always nice to see. Welcome to a great sport.

As one competitor was overheard saying, "This isn't a tournament, it's a reunion!" Even 11-year-old Mallory Nichols is a returning veteran to this fun, yet challenging sport, fired off-hand from 200, 300, 385 and 500 meters without the aid of restrictive clothing or slings.

Spotters help shooters verify their points of impact. Note the dust clouds at the nearest 200-yard line.

Arkansas' 11-year-old Mallory Nichols and her coach/grandfather John Neihouse (both sponsored by LAPUA) pose with a ram silhouette (l.) used on the 500-meter line and a turkey from the 385-meter line.

ONSHIP

Says NRA Silhouette Program Coordinator Jonathan Leighton, "Silhouette shooting came to this country from Mexico in the 1960s. It is speculated that the sport had its origins in shooting contests between Pancho Villa's men around 1914. 'Siluetas Metalicas' uses steel silhouettes shaped like game animals: Chickens up front followed by rows of pigs, turkeys and furthest away, rams."

In order to score a point in silhouettes, the target must be knocked over. Simply turning the target earns no points. Typical silhouette ranges are set-up like a stadium to allow shooting at all four distances simultaneously. The requirement to topple varying weight targets from different distances results in shooters reloading with bullets from 107 to 142 grains to balance knock-down power with minimal recoil. Most silhouette competitors have a box of reloaded ammunition ear-marked for each distance and target.

SIGHT ADJUSTMENT SAVVY

BY GLEN ZEDIKER

Sight click graduations have a lot to do with how a shooter proceeds in a match. There's no question that, for me at least, the finer the adjustment, the better. A sight that moves the bullet 3 inches per click is decidedly a more difficult decision to make! Finer graduations mean both less consequence on a missed read, and better results on a "hit." They also allow me to take a precise setting to favor a wind change.

INTERNATIONAL SHOOTING CHAMPION DOUG KOENIG depends on Leupold's DeltaPoint Reflex Sight for the accuracy he needs to bring home the hardware.

©2010 Leupold & Stevens, Inc.

Figure out the number of clicks per ring to estimate needed correction. This is a term familiar to Smallbore and Air Rifle shooters whose sights use extremely fine click graduations. For the High Power 600 yard MR-1 target, scoring rings X through 8 are in 6-inch increments, or 3 inches per side, meaning that there should be about 2 clicks per ring with 1/4 minute sights: 6 (hundred yards) X .25 = 1.5 per click. A mid-ring 10, for example, should take about 3 clicks to center on the X (1 to get to the X ring, and another 2 to get to its center). This information especially helps new shooters to know "how many clicks" to move.

If you're fishing for a zero on the outer rings, it helps to know that ring numbers 7 through 5 are double-wide, meaning it will take approximately 4 clicks per ring, or 6 inches of movement.

Do this for each target and you won't get lost with sight adjustments during a match. You can find the target dimensions in each online NRA rulebook at www.nrahq.org/compete/nra-rule-books.asp.

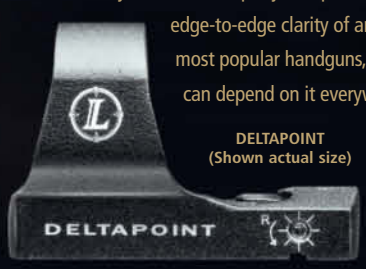

Keeping a list of target ring dimensions will help with sight adjustments during a match.

EXPERT FORUM: WIND SHOOTING

Experienced shooters know the general theory of wind deflection during long distance shooting. Read what these experts have learned through practical experience.

By NRA Staff

Introduction by Bryan Litz, Head Ballistician, Berger Bullets, and author of Applied Ballistics

INTRODUCTION

MECHANICS OF WIND DEFLECTION

Many shooters falsely believe that the wind pushes on the side of a bullet as it flies downrange, and that's what causes it to deflect. That description is inaccurate. So how does it work? A bullet is spin-stabilized, similar to a gyroscope. The term "stability," as it pertains to bullet flight, means that the projectile will align its axis with the oncoming airflow. In other words, it flies point forward into the air. When a crosswind is present, it has the effect of altering the direction from which the air approaches the bullet (see Figure 1). When the bullet turns to align itself with the oncoming airflow, the aerodynamic drag force, which is parallel to the flow is no longer aligned with the line of sight. In this way, the aerodynamic drag has a lateral component that pulls the bullet away from the line of sight, in the downwind direction. It's that lateral component of aerodynamic drag that causes wind deflection during long distance shooting. Note also that the bullet only turns a fraction of a degree, which is why bullet holes in targets aren't noticeably oblong.

MANAGING WIND DEFLECTION—BALLISTICS

Now that we understand the mechanism of wind deflection, what can we do to minimize its effect? There are some misconceptions about the best ballistic solution for minimizing wind deflection. The most common misconception is that a flatter shooting round will have less wind deflection. That's not necessarily true. Consider the .308 Winchester, for example, with light versus heavy bullets. A light bullet of 155 grains and a muzzle velocity of 3000 fps will require about 12 MOA of elevation to be zeroed at 600 yards, with about 28 inches of wind deflection in a 10 mph crosswind. Compare that to a heavier 210-grain bullet at 2577 fps, which requires 15.5 MOA of elevation and 24.3 inches of wind deflection under the same conditions. The lighter, faster 155-grain bullet is 3.5 MOA flatter, but has 3.7 inches (15 percent) more wind deflection than the slower, heavier bullet. This comparison favors the heavier bullet for wind management.

In known distance target shooting contests, the flatness of the trajectory is a non-issue. It's way more important to minimize wind deflection since that's the variable that has the most uncertainty. So what are some ways to minimize wind deflection? Well, we already established that heavier (higher BC) bullets are better, even if it means a reduction in muzzle velocity. If you can fire heavier bullets at high muzzle velocities, that will minimize wind deflection even further. Firing the heaviest, highest BC bullets at maximum velocity is the way to minimize wind deflection.

It's important to keep things in perspective. There are other important factors to consider in addition to just wind deflection—like recoil and accuracy. You might be able to minimize wind deflection by firing a 300 grain .338 caliber bullet at 3000 fps, but this would not maximize your score because of the extreme recoil that's generated. The optimal solution from an overall point of view is something that minimizes wind deflection while also maintaining accuracy and being comfortable to shoot.

MANAGING THE WIND WHILE SHOOTING

Wind shooting requires the shooter to process a pile of information about the wind speed and direction from a myriad of indicators including flags, mirage, grass, trees, feel and the location of yours and other competitors' previous shots. Go to any long-range shooting match and you'll hear this topic discussed at length, with as many unique opinions as there are shooters discussing it. Some swear that the wind closest to the shooter is the only wind to worry about, while some claim the wind at the target is most important. Others will say that the bullet is most affected in the middle of its flight, at its highest point where the wind is fastest. There are also discussions about the relative importance of wind speed changes versus direction changes.

Of all these strategies, the one I personally use and advise is flexibility. Don't make any assumptions—treat each range as though it were completely different each time you shoot a shot. Look everywhere for indicators (causes) that correlate to the deflection of your bullet (effects). If you can identify the indicators that correlate to what you're seeing on the target, then you've identified the cause-effect relationship. Don't ignore any indicators just because you expect them to be useless. Only dismiss an indicator after it proves to be inconsistent with where your shots are going. When you have found an indicator that seems to be good, use it, but don't completely lose track of the others. If the condition changes enough, you may need to look for other indicators that are more valuable in the new condition.

Successfully steering your bullets thru a difficult wind condition can be one of the most difficult and rewarding experiences in long range shooting. Doing well requires experience and sometimes a little luck. Let's see what a few of America's most successful shooters have to say about their strategies for shooting in the wind.

WIND STORIES

Lones Wigger:

This is one time that stands out in my mind where reading the wind properly allowed me to tie the world record and win the Pan American Gold medal in the smallbore rifle 60-shot prone match.

I was in San Juan, Puerto Rico, for the 1979 Pan American Games and had qualified for the 50-meter Smallbore Rifle 3-position and 60-shot prone competitions. During several days of training, I could not figure out what the wind was doing on this difficult range. There were two rows of wind flags located at approximately 10 and 35 meters. Using mirage and both rows of flags, I could get no consistency on shot placement on the target. On the record day for the prone match, I shot about a dozen sighting shots with no consistency, so I finally went for record hoping for a miracle.

I remember my first record shot was a nine at 4 o'clock. I was very disgusted so I decided to watch only the flag nearest to me at 10 meters and continued to fire, being careful to shoot only when this flag was in the same position. It was a very lucky decision since I shot 59 consecutive 10's after my first record shot and ended with a 599. I tied the world record and won the individual gold medal by several points. International ranges are usually enclosed and protected from wind from the rear. However, this range was open on the far right side beyond the last firing point to allow tractors and range equipment access to the range. Since the prevailing wind was from 4 or 5 o'clock, the wind came through this opening and proceeded down the firing line, which made the first row of flags the main indicator. The other row of flags and mirage had little or no effect on bullet placement on the target. The following day I also had the high 40-shot prone score of 399 during the 3-position match using the same method. Sometimes it is better to be lucky than good.

Lanny Bassham:

Wigger was and may still be the best wind-reader in the world. One strategy I always looked for was to simply get squadded next to him and just shoot when he did!

Seriously, one thing I did spend a lot of time on while stationed at Fort Benning was plotting the effects of wind on the bullet's point of impact. There are several wind plotting charts being used in the industry that just aren't correct. During my time at Fort Benning, I "borrowed" several very large fans from one of the base activities and positioned them to blow across the range at various angles. I would fire the same ammunition for each angle and note where the points of impact were. The results are included in the Winning In the Wind DVD that Lones and I produced and are shown in the screen shot above. The number is the clock-direction from where the wind was blowing for this particular impact, using right-twist rifling.

Nancy Tompkins-Gallagher:

Shooting in the wind can be tough, but if you are mentally and physically prepared, it will always be an interesting challenge. When there is wind (mirage, rain, etc.), you need to remember that everyone else is shooting in the same weather. When you mentally accept this fact, you will be able to focus on your own performance and not let the conditions beat you.

One of the most important aspects of shooting in the wind is to know what the no-wind zero is on your rear sight. In calm conditions, it really won't hurt you to adjust a click or two to the left or right to keep your shots in the middle. But when the wind or mirage is changing, you must know what you have on your sights at all times.

Once you've practiced reading the wind, it isn't hard to remember the amount of windage that you have on your sight while following the wind conditions. You can quickly learn what the various wind conditions are worth on your sight as long as you keep track of your settings. For example, lets say that you have 3 ½ minutes 'left' on your rear sight in order to keep your shots centered. You can look at the wind flags and the mirage and know that what you are seeing is worth 3 ½ minutes. This is the easiest way to learn how to read wind on your own.

A challenge in highpower matches is that once you have fired your sighing shots, all of the other shots count for record. If there is a big change in the wind or mirage, you can't go back to a sighter to see the effect on your shot. When the conditions do change, you will need to do one of the following. 1) Wait for your stable condition to return; 2) Notice the degree of change in the mirage, flags and the targets around you to see where their shot placements are; 3) When confident of what the condition is worth, put the proper adjustment on your sight and start shooting again. (This is where a no-wind zero is necessary, in order to avoid becoming lost.)

Shooting well in the wind depends on: 1) Having confidence in yourself and your equipment; 2) Having an established no-wind zero; 3) Knowing how much wind you have on your sight at all times; 4) Using a stopwatch so you can wait out conditions without running out of time; 5) Calling your shots as an indicator of wind changes; 6) Being patient in unstable wind conditions and waiting until you are confident that you can receive a fairly centered shot; 7) Watching for changes—wind flags, mirage, other shooters' targets, blowing dust, vegetation or any other indicator of wind velocity or direction change;
8) Having fun!

David Tubb:

From my notes at the 2004 Long Range Championships, Camp Perry, OH:

Shot the Leech Cup on Saturday. Conditions were pretty good that morning. The Leech Cup is "THE" any-rifle-iron-sight event fired at 1,000 yards. Fired a 200-12X—a respectable score. High scorer from each relay goes to the shoot-off after the conclusion of the team matches (normally late afternoon) and my 200-12X made the cut.

Shoot-off protocol is three sighters and 10 shots for record – X's count. I Shot 100-4X in the shoot-off. Just so happens that one of my competitors and long time friend—Nancy Tompkins-Gallagher, shot the same score. After about 10 minutes of waiting around, we both now go into the sudden death shoot-off. Sudden death is exactly as it sounds (no sighters). As each shot is taken, if you shoot a lesser value shot than your opponent, then you lose the match. In sudden death, the X ring is only as good as the 10 ring. (A 10 is as good as an X.)

So the two of us start shooting with a large crowd watching at a bank of about 15 targets. The other class shoot-off's had now concluded, but the entire bank of targets cycled with each set of sudden death shot sequences, so it was important to keep your shots on your assigned target number.

The sudden death firing sequence gives you 1 minute to shoot the shot and at the end of the minute, all the targets cycle down into the pits. It then takes another couple of minutes to go through the administration of asking are there any 5's are there any 6's etc. until we get to the "are there any 10's?" You hope your target doesn't appear from the pits when they ask, "are there any 9's".

So one can imagine that having up to three minutes in between each of your sudden death shots that the wind and mirage conditions can certainly change at 1,000 yards. I would shoot a shot and then look through my spotting scope, then bury my head on my left arm to relax my eyes and try to remember what the conditions (wind and mirage) looked liked just after I fired that shot. Nancy was probably doing the same.

The targets would cycle up and Nancy and I would repeat with another sudden death shot. After looking back through the scope and judging if and how the conditions had changed from three minutes earlier, I would make minor corrections.

As I said earlier, this occurs in the late afternoon so the light is fading and our eyes are tiring. This sudden death took about 40 minutes to produce a winner. I was told later that this was the longest sudden death event in the history of Camp Perry. It was late enough in the afternoon that I was beginning to use a "frame hold" (entire target is visible in the front aperture) because the sun was beginning to get low in the sky.

On the 17th shot, one target did appear from the pits when the "are there any 9s?" was announced— and it was over. To recount: 20 shots for record to make the shoot-off; 10 shots for record to finish the shoot-off; another 17 shots for record until the sudden death winner was declared. A total of 47 shots in the 10 or X ring, with iron sights, from 1,000 yards, all the while with wind and mirage conditions continually changing. This time, luck was on my side.

[Editor's note: Tubb's "luck" continued that year. Following an unaccustomed second place in service rifle, Tubb did not lose a single point over the next four days of shooting the long range events: Three 600s, two 1000s and one Palma for a score of 1450–101X, out of a possible 1450.]

NRA National Championships are well-organized and run like clockwork, and the pistol matches at Camp Perry, OH, are no exception. The daily 7:30 a.m. starting cannon shot, the commanding voice of the tower talkers and the watchful eye of each volunteer line official give one the feeling of having walked onto an Olympic playing field—with one exception: At Perry, everyone gets to play. Thanks to a time-tested system of classification and squadding, shooters of all skill levels can shoot shoulder-to-shoulder. As is true for all shooting sports, tyros (new shooters) will be welcomed by fellow sportsmen who will help explain such things as how many targets you're supposed to take to the line or provide tips on filling-out your first score card. In fact, there are more marksmen and unclassified shooters than masters, as the table below reflects.

podium this year to claim his 10th win, a record of "most wins" that began with his seventh in 2005. Zins' score of 2650-134X this year surpassed the 2009 winning score of 2646-141X fired by fellow shooter and friend, SFC Jim Henderson of the USAMU.

Judy Tant (East Lansing, MI) won her third consecutive national title and sixth overall with a consistent 2565-69X. (Her 2009 title was won with a 2566-72X.) If you're not familiar with Tant's background, you can read her interview in the Nov. 2009 issue of SSUSA.

Eighteen-year-old Bryan Layfield (Clarksburg, WV) swept nine of the Junior and Collegiate categories in the .22 and .45 cal matches, as well as the overall junior aggregate. Having begun shooting only two years ago, it's fair to call Layfield a "natural." Credit Allen White, twice a member of the NRA's USA Civilian Pistol Team, for recruiting and coaching Layfield.

Shooters from across the U.S. and 16 foreign countries descended on Port Clinton during Jul. 12-19, many using the preceding week's regional match in Canton, OH, as a warm-up. The top three from the Canton match were Henderson

OFFHAND RIFLE SHOOTING

By Harry M. Pope

This is written with the hope that it will help riflemen generally to make better offhand scores; it is based upon many years of shooting and as many years' association with the best offhand shooters that this country has ever produced, as well as my long experience in rifle making, and may help others to ultimate victory.

The Offhand Position. This will vary somewhat with individuals, but it must be perfectly natural, easy and free from muscular strain. The weight should be evenly distributed on both legs; they should be straight and not too far apart. Legs spread too far means muscular strain, while in a proper position the bones should carry the weight. As the writer stands, the feet are at an angle of about 60 degrees, the left foot about 50 degrees with the line of fire, the right a little back or square to the line of fire, the heels 7 inches apart. Don't straddle.

In getting into shooting position, it is extremely important that one gets so set that a natural easy position directs the rifle at the bullseye; therefore in aiming let the rifle come to its natural position; then if, looking over the sights, it is right or left, rock backward, letting the left leg hang, swing the body so the rifle will point at the bull, then rock forward, letting the right leg hang down naturally, and you will now find that the rifle points itself at the bull merely by assuming a perfectly easy position without muscular strain. If not properly set, of course, one can direct the rifle to a considerable angle at either side, but when the nerves relax control of the strained muscles to the slightest degree the muscles assume a natural position and the rifle swings off. A little practice lets one get set at the proper angle, so very little of this setting is usually necessary.

Aiming and Pulling. In a match of considerable length one should never try to pull every shot dead center. It can't be done, and to try to do so only results in fatigue and wild shooting. No matter how expert, one practically never holds perfectly still; there is always a swing or tremor. Don't outhold your wind. Try to pull the first time the sights swing slowly into a position that you can pull cleanly, to score slightly above your average score. In doing this you avoid wild shots, and many times you get off practically on center.

A good score is not made by a large number of perfect shots, but by the absence of poor ones. It does not pay to try to pull centers, unless nothing else will do in a tight place; then be careful. If the sights will not settle before you begin to feel short of breath, put the rifle down and breathe very slowly and deeply two or three times; swallow your guts and try again. Be sure you pull on a slow swing and with a perfectly clean pull.

The trigger should not be extremely tight, but should be perfectly clean and without kick to the finger when it lets go. The trigger guard or lever should bring the trigger finger into such a position that a long forward reach is not necessary. The thumb should be along the side of the stock—not over it; in fact, it should form a gauge to keep the trigger finger in such a position that it comes naturally onto the trigger. This position you must learn to shoot well; the finger cannot be away from the trigger when you want to fire, but in contact with it. The best way when aiming is to keep squeezing the trigger with the finger, then when the sight swings deep into the bull, a little harder touch lets it off. The object of doing this is to avoid sympathetic movements of the other fingers. It is very hard to make a quick movement of one finger without also moving the adjacent fingers more or less, which movement disturbs the aim.

In aiming the rifle (N. R. A. standing position), the left arm should be along the side, the elbow resting on the hip bone if you are so built; if not, then along the side on the short ribs—not in front over the heart and stomach, which cramps the breathing and heart action. Regardless of position, N. R. A. or Army, the right arm should have the elbow well up, not against the side; this pulls the chest open and gives the lungs more capacity; it also allows a straighter stock, and a rifle with straight stock shoots more uniformly than one with much drop.

Breathing. It is extremely important that you pay careful attention to this. One should breathe slowly and deeply. Do not allow yourself to breathe fast, as that tends to make the pulse rapid, which in turn affects the aim. If one is shooting continuous scores with fixed ammunition, one is apt to get short of breath before the score is finished and the pulse goes up. This is because the blood is robbed of the necessary oxygen when holding the breath. We compensate for this by deep slow breathing, making the whole surface of the lungs work instead of the small portion in ordinary use. As I raise my rifle to aim, I lift it high and fill my lungs fully; as I begin to settle I breathe nearly empty, then as the aim begins to settle, breathe about half full and hold the breath till I fire; then at once begin breathing again deeply and slowly.

DID YOU KNOW? …before steel targets were used for silhouette shooting, live farm animals were used, which were later cooked at a barbeque for the contestants. The first silhouette tournament to use steel targets was in 1948 in Mexico City. In 1968, the Tucson Rifle Club introduced the sport here in the U.S. In honor of it's roots, the NRA rule books still include the words "Siluetas Metalicas" in the title.
